Assembly session brought much good

There followed the historic appropriations and budget fight , in which the General Assembly decided to tackle executive powers .

The final decision went to the executive but a way has been opened for strengthening budgeting procedures and to provide legislators information they need .

The legislature expended most of its time on the schools and appropriations questions .

Fortunately it spared us from the usual spate of silly resolutions which in the past have made Georgia look like anything but `` the empire state of the South '' .

`` If once they become inattentive to the public affairs '' , Jefferson said , `` you and I , and Congress and assemblies , judges and governors , shall all become wolves '' .

The danger lay not in believing that our own A-bombs would deter Russia's use of hers ; ; that theory was and is sound .

The danger lay in the American delusion that nuclear deterrence was enough .

By limiting American strength too much to nuclear strength , this country limited its ability to fight any kind of war besides a nuclear war .

This strategy heightened the possibility that we would have a nuclear war .

It also weakened our diplomatic stance , because Russia could easily guess we did not desire a nuclear war except in the ultimate extremity .

This left the Soviets plenty of leeway to start low-grade brushfire aggressions with considerable impunity .

Touring Africa , the new U.S. Assistant Secretary of State observed `` Africa should be for the Africans '' and the British promptly denounced him .

Then he arrived in Zanzibar and found Africans carrying signs saying `` American imperialists , go home '' .
